NAN PATTERSON INDICTED.

ACCUSED ACTRESS'S COUNSEL TO ASK FOR TRIAL IN JULY.

Morgan Smith Said to Be in Sanitarium Beyond Reach of Suppens-Woman to Plead To-day to Charge of Killing "Cesar" Young-Antiquated Formula,

The Grand Jury returned yesterday an indictment for murder in the firs degree against Nan Patterson, the young woman who was in the cab with the turfman, "Caesar" Young, when he was shot and killed in West Broadway a week ago last Saturday morning. She will appear to plead to the indictment before Judge Newburger at 10.30 o'clock this morning.

While the indictment was being returned Miss Patterson was brought from the Tombs to the Coroner's court for the inquest upon Young's death, and had collapsed under the strain, so that she had to have medical treatment. She recovered sufficiently to appear before the Coroner, and the inquest, which was purely perfunctory, went on. The only witnesses examined were Drs. O'Hanlon and Riggin, who testified to the locality of the wound and the direction of the builet which caused Young's death. The open verdict, that Young came to his death from a pistol shot, was returned.

When Nan Patterson, accompanied by her father and a young woman with whom she used to go to school, got to her cell door after the inquest yesterday, she broke into tears once more and threw her arms around her father's neck. She complained bitterly of her sister and her brother-in-law, the Smiths, because they had deserted her when she needed them most, saying that their disappearance had injured her case and put her in a false light before the public.

Mrs. Young, the widow of the dead bookmaker, was at the inquest and on coming out into the corridor came face to face with Nan Patterson. Both women were hurried away in opposite directions by those who accompanied them and there was no scene between them.

Mr. Levy, of counsel for Miss Patterson. said yesterday that he had information that Morgan Smith, the missing witness whom the District Attorney is anxious to confront with the pawnbroker Stern, who sold the pistol with which Young was killed, was in a sanitarium within fifty miles of New York, where his wife was in attendance upon him, Smith having suffered a nervous breakdown from the strain he has been

This means, it was inferred by those who have been watching the case, that Smith have been watching the case, that Smith will not be produced, and that it will be left to the District Attorney to get hold of him the best way he can. It is conceded that the identification of Smith as the purchaser of the pistol, if the pawnbroker can make it, is the most important, if not an all-essential, link in the chain of evidence against Miss Patterson. If Smith is out of the State, and it is assumed that he is, he cannot be brought here by the body attachment which was issued because of his failure to appear in response to a subpœns.

which was issued because of his failure to appear in response to a subpæna.

Mr. Levy said yesterday that when Miss Patterson appeared before Judge Newburger this morning a plea of not guilty woud be made for her, with leave to make a motion. This motion will be for leave to inspect the minutes of the Grand Jury.

"If," said Mr. Levy, "it is found that the indictment was returned on what appears to be insufficient or illegal evidence, a motion to quash will be made. I will say, however, that we do not intend to take advantage of any mere technicalities. Our motions, whatever they may be, will be all over this week. We want everything out of the way as speedily as posbe all over this week. We want everything out of the way as speedily as possible consistent with the interests of our client, so that we may have a speedy trial. I had intended to go to Europe about July 4, but in view of the turn this case has taken I shall probably abandon the trip. We wish to have the case come to trial as early as July. I have had a conference with Mr. Rand, who has the case in charge for the District Attorney, and he showed every disposition to meet us in a fair and liberal spirit, and I have no doubt that will be the attitude of the prosecution."

The indictment is in the antiquated form still used in this county, although the Code till used in this county, although the Cod of Criminal Procedure no longer requires it. The full text is as follows:

SATOLLI AT ST. ANTHONY'S. Presides at Mass on the Saint's Feast Da

The church was decorated with a profusion of flowers, candles and electric lights. The congregation held lilies in their hands while awaiting the blessing at the end of the mass. This is a custom on St. Anthony's Day. The faithful take the lilies home and preserve them as mementos of the feast.

Great devotion has sprung up in the Catholic Church toward St. Anthony of Padua. This devotion is particular when anything has been lost. Everybody who loses anything prays to St. Anthony to restore it to him, and not a few instances are told of his remarkable interest in such matters and ability to return to the unfortunate those things which have become lost, the price of his labor being that you shall in turn feed the hungry and clothe the naked. This pious custom has always been particularly strong in Italy, but has become widespread in the last ten years, until now scarcely a Catholic Church has not its box for alms for St. Anthony's poor.

KEEPS OUT OF A CHURCH ROW. Presbytery Leaves the Westminster Troubles to Adjust Themselves.

The Presbytery of New York reiterated vesterday the stand it took a month ago, in refusing to interfere in difficulties which have arisen among the official boards of the Westminster Presbyterian Church in West Twenty-third street near Seventh avenue and leaving the session as the ruling board of the church to handle the quarrel.

A petition from members of the West minster Church came before the Presbytery, asking that a committee be appointed to meet with the membership of the church, to settle the trouble in the church. The Presbytery sent the petition to the church

The Rev. Dr. Anthony H. Evans, the Moderator, the Rev. Dr. S. D. G. Wylie, Robert Mackenzie, George Alexander, and others, spoke. Approval was given to Dr. Shaw to accept the Chicago call, and his new pastorate will begin early in October.

On Jan. 1 last I made several summary removals without giving reasons for those movals without giving reasons for those dismissals, and I do not hesitate to say that if I found any of the men appointed by me out of sympathy with me, either they or I would have to go, and I don't think it would

The Commissioner said that he had another plan for solving the reserve problem, which he would put into effect.

DAISIES COST YOUNG LIVES.

TWO LITTLE GIRLS RUN DOWN BY A LONG ISLAND TRAIN.

Their Arms Were Full of Flowers Which They Had Picked to Give to Their Mothers—One Was Killed Instantly; the Other Is Dying-Were Pets of Neighborhood.

Two little girls, Jessie Burgis and Ethel Atwell, who were trotting across an iron trestlework of the Long Island Railroad over Jamaica avenue, East New York, with their hands full of daisies for their mothers, were struck by a Far Rockaway train at a quarter past 5 o'clock yesterday

Ethel Atwell was killed instantly, crushed under the wheels of the train. Jessie Burgis was hurled fifty feet in the air over the guard rail to the street. She is dying in St. Mary's Hospital at Jamaica.

The children were the same age, 7 years, cousins and playmates. Jessie's parents live at Maple street and Union place, Brooklyn Hills. Ethel's father and mother live at 17 Jardine place, East New York. Recently the Burgis family moved from Brooklyn Hills, and since then Ethel and her five-year-old sister Bessie had been visiting the Atwells. The older children went to public school 137, Chauncey street and Saratoga avenue, Brooklyn.

Yesterday afternoon their mothers told them they could stay home and play. In the afternoon, early, Mrs. Burgis came to take her daughters home. She happened to say she had seen fields of daisies blooming near the Atwell home.

"We'll get you some, mamma," Jessie said, and after being warned by Mrs. Atwell and Mrs. Burgis to keep away from the railroad trestle over Jamaica avenue, between Park and Napier avenues, the three children ran off.

They picked daisies in a field near the bottom of the trestle until one of them saw a larger field on the other side of the avenue. To reach it they would have to climb the embankment and cross the trestle.

Ethel and Jessie were eager to go, but Bessie wouldn't. "Mamma told us not to," said the littlest girl. "I'm going home and tell her."

The older children ran across the trestle to the tempting field and gathered daisies until they had their arms full. Then they started back.

street, train No. 48, bound for Far Rockaway, and running perhaps forty miles an hour, turned a curve behind them. Engineer John Welsh of 57 Buford street, Jamaica, saw the frightened children running over the ties, still clinging to their daisies. He blew half a dozen sharp blasts on the whistle and applied the emergency brakes. The brakes did not work satisfactorily. Ethel was ground under the locomotive. Jessie was thrown into the air fully fifty feet and fell into the street.

Welsh stopped the train and ran back to where a big crowd had already gathered. Everybody knew who the two little girls were, and Welsh learned that the dead child was the daughter of Conductor Atwell, one of his intimate friends. Already half distracted, the engineer broke down completely mothers, and Mrs. Atwell and Mrs. Burgis went to look for their children. Half a dozen blocks from the trestle they saw a crowd and had a premonition of evil. Several saw them running toward the spot, and neighbors and policemen stopped them and told them what had happened as mercifully as possible.

Ethel Atwell's body, terribly mangled

Ethel Atwell's body, terribly mangled, was taken to Simonson's morgue at Ozone Park. Jessie, with her thigh fractured, her right leg broken, her left arm crushed, her left shoulder broken and with internal injuries, was placed unconscious in an ambulance from St. Mary's Hospital, Jamaica, and driven there as fast as the horses could gallop. Her condition was hopeless.

Engineer Welsh was arrested and charged with homicide. His bail was placed at $1,000, which was furnished last night by Joseph Epege of Woodhaven Junction, a representative of the Long Island Railroad Company. Welsh was entirely broken down and could not talk except to repeat over and over again:

"I could not stop the train. I had no time. I'll never get that sight out of my When Conductor Atwell came home last night he became almost insane from grief. Every morning for weeks the children had ridden to school on his train and back home with him in the evening. He was uneasy yesterday evening when they did not get on after schooltime and hastened home as soon as possible to find out why his two daughters and Jessie Burgis had not been to school.

The accident caused sadness in all that part of East New York last night because part of East New York last night because the children were pets of every one, friends with policemen, street car men and railroad employees, and were liked for their pretti-ness and their cheery little faces. Scores of neighbors called at the Atwell home to see if they could do anything for the stricken

Foreigners May Play on Invitation in

Golfers from Scotland, England, Ireland, or wherever in the wide world there is a links, are free to play in the next amateur championship of the United States, to begin on Sept. 6 at the Baltusrol Golf Club and last out the week. The announcement was made yesterday by W. Fellowes Morgan, secretary of the United States Golf Association, who tates that the by-laws have been amended so as to permit foreigners who may be visi ing this country to take part in the amateur championship on the invitation of the ex ecutive committee.

The news should be welcomed in Grea Britain, where the amateurs must be eager to again tackle Walter J. Travis under forma conditions, and moreover, as the Olympic golf tournament begins at the Glen Echo links, St. Louis, on Sept. 16, the golfers will have a double incentive to make the trip to his country. The representatives of the Oxford and Cambridge Golfing Society who played here last season made a good impression, and our players, at least those met with yesterday, will be glad to again meet them and as many more who choose to come over. Representatives of other countries will also be welcome. If a foreigner wins the title he will have to return next year to defend it, just as Travis will be bound to go abroad in 1905 to defend the title he has won at Sandwich. It would be a unique situation should the American championship go abroad the very year the British trophy has been won for America. Travis, as the holder for the third time of the American title, is certain to be a starter at Baltusrol, but, should he be disposed of there as the U.S. G. A. champion, it will not affect his title to the amateur championship of Great Britain.

Before their departure for Sandwich, E. M. Byers and F. Oden Horstmann said that a party of golfers, to include Robert Maxwell Jr., the Hunters and John L. Low, would return with them in the summer to play in our tournaments. The new ruling will open the amateur championship to the party, and, as a sequence to Travis's victory, the ruling will probably bring over a number of British players. In this event an international team match looms up as a possibility, especially as the amateur championship will not start until the Tuesday, and Monday would be available for such a contest.

President Russell of the Metropolitan Golf Association, who returned from abroad on Friday, said it was probable that the M. G. A. might honor Travis's victory in some special manner. The United States Golf Association committee, at least up to this time, has not considered any plans regarding a reception to Travis upon his return to this country.

BETTING ON THE FIGHT. Munroe's Backers Demand 10 to 4, and Odds May Change.

Local sporting men are much interested in the preliminary talk and gossip anent the coming contest between Jim Jeffries and Jack Munroe at San Francisco next Friday night. Every morsel of news relative to the condition of the rivals is accepted for what it is worth, and after weighing things up the admirers of each man give the speculation end of the scrap consideration. Thus far there has been little change in the betting odds. Wagers are being made with more frequency, but the bets are not of a large nature. This is to be expected in view of the records of the men and Munroe's lack of experience. Even those who think so well of the miner's chances and offer enthusiastic opinions, do not show any desirto put any money on him. Those who will, and there are many, will do so purely from a gambler's end of view, and take a chance. Two to one on Jeffries was the prevailing price a few days ago. Now the figures have changed a trifle. Most of those who have rallied to the miner's side think that 2 to 1 is not enough and are now demanding odds of 10 to 4.

The reports of Jeffries's ailments, principally his sore knee, are not taken seriously by the rank and file of sports. They look upon these things as in the natural course of events preceding a big heavyweight contest. The wise ones who have heard of Jeffries's alleged Ill luck shake their heads and smile. thing has to be done to boost the fight and odds," one of them said, "and it might as well come from the Jeffries camp. Jeffries is all right, and there is nothing the matter with him. The fight won't be postponed. Graney will referee, and the champion will win."

Jim Wakely who is in close touch with Jeffries and his trainer, Delaney, scouts the idea that the champion is alling in any way. He declares that if there was really anything the matter with the boilermaker he would have been informed before this. Wakely thus far has not found any one who cares to risk his money on the Butte fighter, although his offer to bet $5,000 at 2 to 1 on still holds good.

to risk his money on the Butte fighter, although his offer to bet $5,000 at 2 to 1 on still holds good.

"Munroe is robust and clever," Wakely says, "and he may have a punch and do the trick. On form 2 to 1 on is an excellent price, and I will not give any better odds even if I fail to secure a wager."

Another recruit to the Munroe side is Joe Weber, formerly of Weber & Fields. The comedian has great hopes of Munroe's ultimate victory, and will bet on him. Fields says that his investment will not be large, but of sufficient proportions to have a big interest in the result. Benny Levy, a commissioner for one of the biggest bookmakers on the track, says that he has $2,000 to bet on Munroe. He will not part with his money unless he secures 10 to 4, and he is confident that he will get it before the night of the combat arrives. Dick Bernard and George Considine are also on the Munroe end, and declare that they will bet tidy sums if they can get odds of 10 to 4. They seem to think that the relative records of the men make this price reasonable. Considine is sanguine that by to-morrow all the heavy bettors will fall into line and that the odds will change from 2 to 1 on to 10 to 4 on.

YALE CREW'S FAST TIME. Varsity Eight Covers Four Miles in Close

GALES FERRY, June 13 .- Both the Yale and Harvard 'varsity eights had time rows over the four-mile course to-day, the New Haven crew going down stream in the morning and her Cambridge rivals pulling up stream later in the afternoon. Both crews had wind and tide in their favor, the conditions, however, slightly favoring the Eli boat.

Capt. Cross gave out the time as 20 min utes 55 seconds, but watches at Red Ton time of 20 minutes 16 seconds, close to the time of 20 minutes is seconds, close to the course record. Coach Colson took the freshmen in hand for instruction for the first time this afternoon. The crew is not rowing very smoothly since Hopewell was taken out, and it is doubtful if he will be back in the boat. His sudden absence from the shell is a mystery at Red Top and it is feared he is not up to the standard in his examinations.

Yale's freshman crew was forced to take their morning practice without their captain, Moon, but he was able to go in the boat to-night after a slight indisposition with tonsilitis.

Davy's new cedar shell was used for the first time by Yale's 'varsity eight, and aside from minor adjustments, was favorably spoken of by the crew and coaches.

Cool weather prevails and blankets are in demand at quarters every night.

RODE IN AUTO TO MISS GOULD'S

LEGLESS MAN'S WEIRD QUEST FOR CHARITY.

Threw Away His Crutches and Hadn't One Cent to Pay for Hire of Machine-Letter With Two Pennies and a Postage Stamp Rejected-Ride Ends in a Cell

When the Charities Department steame Thomas S. Brennan arrived at the foot of East Twenty-sixth street yesterday afternoon with its daily batch of discharged patients from the Blackwell's Island hospitals, a poorly dressed man, minus both egs, hobbled to the pier on crutches and tackled Jeff Morrell, the Morgue cop.

"Say, boss, do you know where I can get an automobile?" he asked. Jeff said he thought Supt. Meeks of the Outdoor Poor Bureau might help him out. "I don't know whether devil wagone are in his line or not, though," added Jeff. The cripple told Supt. Meeks that he wanted to hire an auto and so convinced him that he was able to pay for one that Supt. Meeks handed him the address of an automobile renting company on West Thirty-eighth street. At the cripple's request, a clerk telephoned the firm to send down a machine.

When Russell A. Lehman got to the foot of Twenty-sixth street with an auto he wasn't much impressed by the cripple's appearance, but he got such a fine line of talk that he asked the man who he was and where he wanted to go.

"I'm Walter D. Gravlin of Providence and I'm here on business with Helen Gould," he replied. "Kindly say whether or not you're going to take me to her residence."

Lehman concluded to take him, and started for Fifth avenue. As soon as he turned out of Twenty-sixth street he heard a clattering behind, and turning around, saw Gravlin's crutches lying in the street. the street.

"Think Miss Gould will like me better without crutches," he explained.
When the machine reached Miss Gould's residence, Gravlin pulled a letter addressed to her out of his pocket, and asked the driver to kindly deliver it.

"You see I'm perfectly helpless, and besides I haven't got a cent of money," he said. "Your only chance to get any pay is to touch her through this letter."
Lehman saw he was liable to get the worst of it anyhow, so he went up and rang the doorbell.

"Here's a letter to Miss Gould," he said to the butler.

"You'll have to excuse her, but she isn't receiving letters to-day," the butler replied. The driver went back to his fare, and, handing him back the letter, remarked that his chances for getting into jail were pretty good unless he dug up $5. He said he would apply to the Charity Organization Society at 105 East Twenty-second street for enough to pay the automobile hire.

When Gravlin got there he sent the driver in to tell the society people that a legless man wanted to see somebody in authority. One of the clerks went out to the automobile. He said the society didn't give out money for automobile hire on Mondays.

The driver then took Gravlin to the East Twenty-second street police station in a treet.

The letter was written in the City Hospital, Blackwell's Island, on Sunday, and explained that the writer was suffering from chronic throat trouble, in addition to being without his legs, which were amputated a few months ago. He had a sixtynine-year-old mother in Providence who wasn't able to help him, and he thought Miss Gould might buy him artificial legs and send him to a hospital where he could have his throat cured.

Gravlin was carried to a cell.

The Commissioner knows the crossing

The Commissioner knows the crossing from personal experience. When he was making an automobile tour a week ago Sunday to find out where the greatest danger was from stone throwers he drove over the road through Van Cortlandt Park. When he reached the grade a standing train partly blocked the crossing, and he was obliged to halt on the grade. It is so steep that the machine started to back, and the brake rod was bent in the effort to stop it.

Y., June 13.—George Spencer, the colored auto driver who was injured in the Van Cortlandt wreck on Sunday afternoon, is still in St. Joseph's Hospital in this city, and it is believed he has a chance for his life. SUICIDE NOT IN SUICIDE CLUB.

OLD YARN REVIVED BY DEATH OF BRIDGEPORT MAN.

Once Well to Do Hotel Keeper, Taken as a Charity Guest at the Morton House, Shoots Himself-Ruined by Real Estate Speculation-Club Just a Joke.

George Wagner, 60 years old, of Bridgeport, Conn., a charity guest at the Morton House, Fourteenth street and Broadway, was found dead in bed yesterday morning. He had shot himself through the left temple. Two revolvers were found on the bed close to his body.

Wagner went to the hotel Sunday night and sat in the office until long after all the guests had retired. He was then questioned, and when it was found that he was homeless and penniless, Proprietor Nugent instructed the night clerk to give him shelter for the night.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., June 13.-George Wagner for many years conducted a little German hotel and summer garden here, which was the reputed headquarters of a suicide club, the existence of which there are good reasons for doubting.

Wagner made a fortune in his cozy little resort, which was patronized by the best people in Bridgeport at times. He served German dinners in the proper style, and the Judges of the county courts and other local and county officials were wont to gather and county officials were wont to gather there and dine.

It was fifteen years ago when the suicide club story was started by Detective Frank Taylor and Customs Inspector George Morgan, both dead now, who were noted wags in their day. Daniel Loeser, a jolly, good natured German, who was ever ready to assist in a joke of any kind, allowed himself to be heralded far and wide as president of the mythical Bridgeport Suicide Club. He has a scrap book with clippings from any number of newspapers which devoted columns and even pages to his unique title and the club which never existed.

"It's a chestnut," said Loeser to-night. "For God's sake don't work a willing horse to death. I have a family growing up now and my children are old enough to read the newspapers. That yarn was worked to death. It was a good story, but it was only a story.

Speaking of the fatal automobile accident at the Van Cortlandt Park station on Sunday, Police Commissioner McAdoo said yesterday:

"The New York and Putnam crossing there is a terribly dangerous place, and some step ought to be taken to make it safer for drivers and pedestrians. I hope That suicide club story

Why, I got a letter once from France con-taining applications for admission to the club from four Frenchmen. Didn't my father in Germany read about me in a Berlin paper once and he wrote me a scorcher of a letter and wanted to know if I was getting crazy."
The suicide club story has been current for upward of fifteen years. Every German of any prominence who took his own life was said to have been a member. The story had been resting for five years until its present revival. ENTERTAINS WORKING GIRLS. R. M. Bruce Has a Score at Indian Harbor
